Amici curiae, by and through their attorneys, hereby move for leave to file the following brief in support of the Class Action Petition for Relief under the Illinois Post-Conviction Hearing Act. In support of this Motion, amici state as follows.

1. Amici represent a group of 85 individuals from diverse professional experiences, including former judges, former prosecutors, present and former government officials, law professors, and leaders of numerous bar associations, law firms, and other legal organizations.<sup>1</sup>

2. Despite their diverse backgrounds and experiences, amici share the common and firm belief that the integrity of the criminal justice system and the Court's decision in *People v. police Commander Jon Burge to prove their claim.

3. Amici respectfully submit that in order to give effect to the Illinois Supreme Court's ruling in Wrice, it is necessary for this Court to establish a reliable process for determining which victims of torture under the Burge watch were physically coerced into confessing. Each of those alleged victims is entitled to a day in court to determine the veracity of his allegations. These hearings are not merely important to the incarcerated defendants, they are essential to ensuring that this intolerable blot on our criminal justice system is remedied.

4. If this Court establishes such a process, many of the amici are committed to recruiting competent counsel from leading Illinois law firms to represent Petitioners at these hearings on a pro bono basis. Only by providing meaningful representation and review for Petitioners' claims, without regard to procedural defenses, can we close this sad chapter in the history of this great State and make clear that our criminal justice system remains an institution of the highest integrity and reliability.

WHEREFORE, for the reasons set forth above, amici respectfully request that this Court grant leave to file the Brief Of Amici Curiae Ad Hoc Committee Of Former Judges, Former Prosecutors, Present And Former Government Officials, Law Professors, And Leaders of Bar Associations, Law Firms, And Other Legal Organizations In Support Of Class Action Petition for Relief Under The Illinois Post-Conviction Hearing Act.

Amici curiae represent diverse professional experiences, including former judges, former prosecutors, present and former government officials, law professors, and leaders of numerous bar associations, law firms, and other legal organizations.<sup>1</sup> Despite their diverse professional experiences and perspectives, amici share the common and firm belief that the integrity of the criminal justice system and the Court's decision in *People v. Many of the amici are committed to recruiting competent counsel from leading Illinois law firms to represent Petitioners at these hearings on a pro bono basis.

ARGUMENT

Earlier this year, the Illinois Supreme Court emphatically and unequivocally ruled that no conviction in the State of Illinois can rest in whole or in part on a confession that was the product of torture or other physical coercion. See Wrice, 2012 IL 111860. In the words of this State's highest court: "harmless-error analysis is inapplicable to [a] defendant's post-conviction claim that his confession was the product of physical coercion by police officers at Area 2 headquarters"; the "use of a defendant's physically coerced confession as substantive evidence of his guilt is never harmless error." Id. at ¶ 84.

In order to give effect to that ruling, it is necessary for this Court to establish a reliable process for determining which victims of torture under the Burge watch were physically coerced into confessing. Each of those alleged victims is entitled to a day in court to determine the veracity of his allegations. Consistent with the Supreme Court's harmless error ruling in Wrice, this Court should address the merits of these claims without regard to procedural defenses.

Illinois courts have long recognized that equity requires the full and fair opportunity to present one's case, and as a result, no procedural defense should preclude a post-conviction decision on the merits of claims as to which there has not been a full and fair opportunity to litigate. See People v. Pitsonbarger, 205 Ill. 2d 444, 458 (2002) (finding that "where fundamental fairness so requires" the administrative bar of waiver is excused in successive post-conviction petitions); Chicago Park Dist. v. Kenroy, Inc., 78 Ill. 2d 555, 563-64 (1980) (applying equitable tolling principles when party did not become aware of misconduct until after a separate prosecution revealed the concealment).

No incarcerated Burge torture victim has had a full and fair opportunity to litigate his claim of torture because, until recently, none of them had access to the totality of evidence that the unimaginable was true, i.e., that there was systematic torture at Area 2 over the course of two decades. Also, until recently, none had the benefit of the Illinois Supreme Court's ruling in Wrice that harmless error is not a defense to a conviction based on a confession extracted by torture.

Until recent evidence came to light, there was natural skepticism about the allegations that Burge and those acting under his supervision had committed systematic torture to extract confessions. Only now that there is substantial evidence that torture and physical coercion were relatively common and accepted under Burge's command, can Petitioners receive full and fair consideration of their claims.

We have now learned that Burge's systematic torture began as early as 1973 when Burge and two of his men tortured Anthony Holmes into confessing to a murder by placing a plastic bag over his head, tightening it, and then running electric current to wires that were attached to his handcuffed wrists and ankles. Even in 2003, only the tip of the iceberg was known. An Illinois Governor stated in granting pardons to four of Burge's victims in 2003: "The category of horrors was hard to believe. If I hadn't reviewed the cases myself, I wouldn't believe it. . . . We have evidence from four men . . . all getting beaten and tortured and convicted on the basis of the confessions they allegedly provided." Governor George H. Ryan, Statement at DePaul University College of Law (Jan. 10, 2003). The evidence has now emerged that Burge was engaged in a pattern of systematic torture over the span of two decades. Most recently, in sentencing Burge to prison for perjury and obstruction of justice in 2011, U.S. District Court Judge Lefkow rejected Burge's repeated denials of the torture and stated that "the jury did not believe you and I must agree that I did not either." U.S. v. Burge, No. 1:08-cr-00846, Docket No. 407, at 206:4-5 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 21, 2011).

In light of this evidence and the decision in Wrice, the case of every alleged victim deserves examination or re-examination to ensure that no person remains incarcerated on account of systematic torture. These hearings are not merely important to the incarcerated defendants, they are essential to ensuring that this intolerable blot on our criminal justice system is remedied. Amici submit that neither this Court nor the legal community can underestimate the importance of these hearings to vindicating the integrity of the criminal justice process and the trust of the people of the State of Illinois in that process.

As former U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald wrote in the Government's Objections to the Presentence Report and Sentencing Memorandum following Burge's conviction, "perhaps the greatest cost of [Burge's] conduct was the impact on the community's trust and confidence in the criminal justice system. During [Burge's] reign, the legitimacy of the criminal justice system was severely compromised, and the social issues of that time became more pronounced because of it." See U.S. v. Burge, No. 1:08-cr-00846, Docket No. 336, at 26 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 12, 2010). Although Burge's conviction was an important step in restoring the legitimacy of the criminal justice system, it will never be fully restored without a robust review of Petitioners' claims, unconstrained by procedural defenses that might otherwise apply to post-conviction review.

If this Court grants the relief requested in the Petition and orders evidentiary hearings, some of the amici will endeavor to provide legal representation and/or seek to recruit other qualified lawyers to provide representation on a pro bono basis, so as to ensure that adequate process is provided to the class members in any hearings on whether their confession was extracted by torture by Burge or those acting under his supervision.

Only by providing meaningful representation and review for Petitioners' claims, without regard to procedural defenses, can we close this sad chapter in the history of this great State and make clear that our criminal justice system remains an institution of the highest integrity and reliability.
